Update from Tom Bozada, US Army Engineer R&D Center (ERDC), on the Tactical Microgrid Standards (TMS) draft:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The TMS is now expected to be adopted by other NATO allies and several NGO's are interested as well. The TMS scope will expand to include larger, medium voltage generation assets as well as utility paralleling with host nations. The final TMS draft is due for release in December 2017 and is expected to be incorporated into future military generator specifications by 2019.
Update from Jennifer Whitmore, PM-E2S2, via remote on current and future government military programs	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The AMMPS microgrid system control has been revised to include remote load-dependent start/stop capabilities, using an external connection box designed by E2S2. No word on whether or when the connection box will be sent out for competitive bid. No word on when the AMMPS generator program will be sent out for competitive bid. E2S2 is developing a specification for a new, 900-watt, 28 VDC power generation/storage system. No timeline for completion was given as the system topology has not been finalized; the main constraint is the 20# carrying weight limit per soldier. No updates were available for the LAMPS or DPDGS programs, and no additional E2S2 programs are expected before 2025.
